

Certifying capacity for work - musculoskeletal injuries

Reasonable adjustments are changes or modifications to work duties, practices or the workplace that accommodate a worker's return to work and work capacity. Employers and insurers often refer to the certificates of capacity to inform what work is suitable for the worker to perform. The diagram below provides specific examples you can use to identify reasonable adjustments for musculoskeletal injuries.

